A theory of location based on the notion of entire location

Zoom link:  <https://lingnan.zoom.us/j/91761022322>

Abstract:

I will present and defend a theory of location that leaves room both for the possibility that some objects are located without having an exact location and for the possibility that some objects are multilocated. The theory is based on a single primitive locational notion, that of being entirely located at.
